Physical Intervention Policy

Our Policy Statement:

While physical intervention is always a last resort for staff, we recognise that it can be necessary where failure to take action is likely to result in significant harm.

Trauma-informed Practice:

At Bishop Aldhelm's, we adopt a trauma-informed approach when building relationships with all children to ensure that we never place pupils in situations that they are unable to manage. Behaviour for learning focuses on establishing positive relationships, on being self-reflective and self-managing and on engaging with the curriculum. It applies as much to teachers and their relationship with children as it applies to the children themselves.

Physical Intervention will always be:

SecuriCare

Some children with Behaviour Response Plans have identified physical interventions names on these that trained staff may need to use when necessary. If a child does not have a Behaviour Response Plan, physical intervention may still be deemed necessary where there is a risk of harm.
