Returning to school after COVID-19: Advice for parents

The process of welcoming children back into schools after a period of school closure might be a source of concern and challenge for some children and their parents, and this might create a range of different emotions. For children, some emotions might be excitement to see their friends again or worry that things might be different in school. It is important for adults and caregivers to support children to recognise that a variety of feelings such as feeling anxious, worried, scared etc. are completely normal and should be recognised and validated.

TOP TIPS

Help your child to establish a predictable and consistent routine by using a visual calendar on display so that your child can begin counting down the days to the first day back, re-start a clear morning and evening (bedtime) routine, in preparation for getting ready for school again.

Chat with your child about starting back at school. What do they think it will be like? What are they most looking forward to? Is there anything they're unsure about? By talking about this, you can find out how your child is feeling and they can feel heard and reassured by you.

Try to show your children that you feel calm about their return to school.

It is important that you talk with school staff about changes in family circumstances e.g. illness, bereavement, trauma, furloughing/job loss and separation so that they can be supported.

Help your child focus on what will be the same in school to help reduce anxiety: same staff, classroom, furniture, equipment etc.

Children and young people have spent a lot of time with parents/carers during the lockdown period, and they might want to remain with you. Reassure them that lots of other children are likely to be feeling the same way, and remind them that you will be there for them at the end of the school day.

Try and encourage your child to talk about what they are feeling and explain that experiencing a range of emotions is normal. You can also try 'wondering aloud' to try and interpret how your child might be feeling about returning to school, with curiosity and empathy e.g. "I wonder if you are feeling a little worried about going back to school because you are used to being at home. I understand that and it is normal to feel that way. I am feeling a little worried about going back to work, too. Would it help if we had a talk about how we are feeling?"

Back to School Social Story

To stop people from sharing their germs and getting sick my school was closed.

I had to stay at home and stay safe.

The Government who are in charge say it is safe for me to go back to school.

When I go back to school some things will be the same and some things may be different.

Research identifies five key principles; these are important to consider when supporting children, young people and staff returning to school:

• A sense of safety: Children/young people and the staff at school need to feel safe when they return.

- A sense of calm: A range of emotions will be experienced by the child/young person before, during and after their transition to school. These emotions should be validated and normalised to help the child/young person become regulated and calm.
- A sense of self- and collective- efficacy: It is important that the child /young person feels a sense of control about what is happening to them. They should feel that their individual actions alongside those done collaboratively with their peers will lead to positive outcomes.

- Social connectedness: Children/young people and staff in school should feel they belong to their school community and can be supported in school.
- Promoting hope: Creating and encouraging active hope will be important for showing children/young people and the staff in school that things will get better.

It will be the responsibility of schools to consider these principles but as parents, there are actions that can be taken to facilitate the principles being put into place too.
