

1. Being Human

We begin our year by thinking about issues faced by humans around the world. Pupils will reflect on our sources of authority and guidance, where morals come from and the difference between right and wrong. Students will look at crime and punishment in the eyes of the law, religious and non-religious views and critically evaluate capital punishment. We develop skills of written argument discussing moral issues of animal testing, abortion and euthanasia using religious teachings to suggest how different groups would respond to the issues. Skills of reflection, research, application, empathy and communication will be further developed through the use of scenarios and real world events to apply religious teachings and reflect on their relevance for believers in the modern world.

2. Religion and relationships (continued)

Throughout each key topic we will look at sources of authority across different major world religions, consider their influence on believers and apply teachings to scenarios, taking into account modern societal norms. We will develop our abilities to form reflective, well-considered and reasoned conclusions in written tasks by analysing religious teachings relating to marriage, family, homosexuality and gender roles.

Assessment 1 (Oct) Being Human
We will assess your understanding of the topic through a mixture of short and long answer questions with a focus on key terminology and the formulation of arguments for and against a topical issue including the application of religious teachings.

Assessment 2 (Apr) Religion and relationships
We will assess your understanding of the topic through a mixture of short and long answer questions. An extended writing piece on evaluation of religious teachings on relationships in the modern world.

2. Religion and relationships

Pupils begin by defining relationships and considering what they already know about religious attitudes, applying their knowledge and understanding of religious belief. Pupils consider religious attitudes to premarital sex and evaluate whether religious views are outdated and how they may influence religious believers.

3. Religion and society

Pupils will start the topic by thinking about those in need around the world, the numbers of those in poverty around the world and assess the reasons for this poverty. Pupils will analyse a variety of religious teachings across Christianity, Islam, Buddhism, Hinduism, Sikhism and Judaism then apply these to situations around the world by suggesting how the teaching would influence religious believers to respond. Students will research examples of religious charity around the world and be able to explain how religion is working to reduce poverty.

We will consider the UK law on prejudice and discrimination through the Equality Act 2010 and pupils will compare religious teachings to the requirements given in the protected characteristics. Students will critically evaluate whether these teachings are compatible with the modern world. Finally, students will consider whether it is possible to hold scientific world views alongside a commitment to religion.

Assessment 3 (Jul) Religion and society
We will assess your understanding of the topic through a mixture of short and long answer questions. An extended writing piece on the work of religions to reduce poverty and on prejudice and discrimination.
