

As Adriana took a step into the Hydracorn's lair she took a glance inside. Quickly, the door slammed. The lights flickered off. Suddenly, Adriana was in complete darkness. She couldn't see a thing. All she heard was the echo of blood drops. Without hesitation, Adriana took another step inside of the lair. She stepped in skeletons of humans who came here in the past. Suddenly, she stopped and with her eyes wide open she saw hearts still beating hung up on the ceiling. Her jaw dropped. She rubbed her eyes to see if it was a dream but it wasn't. She could smell a putrid odour it smelt like rotten flesh or rotten eggs. Adriana thought if she should turn back. "Should I turn back?" Adriana thought. She held her breath and carried on with her quest. Eventually, she came across a rickety bridge. Slowly, she walked across, CRACK! Suddenly, Adriana heard a sound of bones so she knew she was getting closer. She broke through the cobwebs and before her very eyes there it was the HYDRACORN...