

Deep in the Amazon rainforest

As Tepui wandered deep into the rainforest, he experienced wondrous sights of the misty rainforest. High in the emergent layer, birds flew high through the luscious leaves, bright brown branches and through the wind. Toucans squawked wildly, which was like a noisy din. There was a Kiskadee bird which chirped with joy. The chirps and the squawks made a noisy din but it made it welcoming to him. As a Scarlet macaw was soaring like a fiery meteor, all birds stopped and listened to the melodious tunes, notes, melodies and the music. It was soaring like a phoenix that had power over the rainforest. The notes, the melody, the tune and the music flowed around the entire rainforest. All the birds live in a great kapok tree that was as tall as a giant.

Below that was the canopy where the tree porcupines swung from branch to branch. They felt the tree shake from below. The howler monkeys were trying to alert all of the animals.

Beneath the understory, vines were hanging down to the floor. Orchids were nesting on the branches like a mother bird. Ferns as green as leaves looked good to the herbivores. The fragrant flowers were hanging down from the trees. The graceful humming bird was sucking juicy, perfume nectar. Next, tree frogs were jumping leaf to leaf. They had bright red eyes and slimy skin. Whilst the frogs were jumping, an Ocelot was ready to make his move.

Finally on the forest floor, a boa constrictor slithered undetected in the underbrush.

By Amarie

