

DEEP IN THE AMAZON RAINFOREST

As Tepui wondered in to the rainforest, he experienced wondrous sights. Leaping from leaf to leaf a poisonous dart frog, which had long legs, was searching for its prey. The frog had slimy scales on its back. It had dare devil eyes.

A couple of miles away, a jaguar stood with black rosettes on its skin. In the long grass, the jaguar was camouflaged, viciously hunting for its prey.

Close to the jaguar, was a lake. In the lake were piranhas. Snaking through the river, a group of man eating piranhas were stealthily swimming.

In the sky, there was a flock of rainbow-like scarlet macaws. Every time they flapped there luminous wings little fiery meteors hit the ground.

High in the trees, there was a hairy sloth hanging on a tree. On the sloths chest was a baby, fast asleep. A couple of trees away were a monkey. The monkeys were happily jumping from tree to tree. Rapidly the monkeys were swinging from tree to tree.

By Kyle