

Deep in the Amazon rainforest

As Tepui wondered deeper into the rainforest, he experienced wondrous animals. A jaguar, which had black rosettes on her yellowish brown skin, growled at her prey. Beside the jaguar, vibrant blue morpho butterflies fluttered as the mist rose from the ground. Under a rock, a bunch of army ants scuttled across the floor searching for food. Not far from the ants, a single Tree Frog leapt from leaf to leaf looking for food. A few trees away from the frog, piranhas swam as fast as they could to find their prey.

Not far from Tepui, he saw magenta purple orchids. Lime green ferns glowed in the dappled light. Blood red bromeliads became blurry because of the light. Vivid green vines swung as a monkey jumped from vine to vine. A single bird of paradise glowed with orange. Beside the bird of paradise, a kapok tree stood tall like a soldier.

High in the canopy, a sloth slowly climbed across a branch to sleep. A kiskadee bird tweeted melodious songs as the rainforest went silent for the night. Monkeys swung from branch to branch chattering loudly.

High above the canopy, a flock of toucans soared through the rain. Their beaks, which looked like sunsets, shimmered in the light. Not far from the toucans, a single scarlet macaw exploded with colour. I meteor. The rainforest was alive with sounds.
