

Deep in the Amazon Rainforest

As Tepui wandered deeper into the rainforest he experienced wondrous sights. On the forest floor, was dead leaves which crunched under his feet and mud which squelched. Beside his feet, was a clear, rocky river. Next to the river, was a frog which leapt on the mud. It had long legs, daredevil eyes and it was slimy. Tepui could feel the humid, steamy mist blowing against his face.

Nearby was a jaguar which had black rosettes on its fur. It was hidden in the shadows. It padded silently into the grass. It stared at its prey. It arched its back...GROWL it was like thunder. A few meters away was a termite which resembled knights in armour. It shot out noxious, poisonous chemical. The chemical came out of the long, deadly snout.

Behind the termite, was the Amazon River which snaked its way through the forest. In the water, piranha's which had sharp teeth. They are vicious, angry little things. Above the river, were vines which dangled like decorations. On the vine, were army ants which were dark and strong. He looked around. There was moss covered trees. Near the trees, was venus fly traps which are dangerous and prepared for anything.

All around him was butterflies fluttering. They were beautiful, symmetrical and vibrant. Near the butterflies, was a three toed sloth which had a baby hung on its dark brown back. It was slow and steady as it plodded along.
