

Deep in the Amazon rainforest

As Mo Mo wandered deeper into the magnificent rainforest, a sloth swung from branch to branch and it stopped by to eat a ripe red berry. Not far from where the sloths were, there was a jaguar which leapt down to the forest floor and growled deafeningly. Beside the jaguar, was a Boa Constrictor that slithered across the mouldy, damp floor and hissed loudly.

Camouflaged into the chestnut brown tree, there was a chameleon that stood eating his prey. Beside the river was a tree frog, which had daredevil eyes and was munching on a luscious green leaf. In the emergent layer, trees poked out into the mist. High above the mist, there was a scarlet red macaw which streaked the sky red like fiery meteors. High in the canopy, there was a howler monkey that swung from branch making a cacophony of noise. All around him, he saw a disco of animals which made an incredible din. You could smell the fragrant flowers which stood before him. Up in the emergent layer, spider's webs dangled down like decorations.
