Information:	Jamila Gavin was born in India in 1941, in the foothills of the Himalayas. Her Father was Indian and her mother was English and she always described herself as 'half and half'. She always said that she had inherited two cultures that ran side by side in her life and made her feel that she belonged to both countries. She first visited England when she was 6 years old and settled there when she was 11. She worked in the music department for the BBC before becoming a writer. After her first child was born, she became aware that there were not many children's books reflecting the experience of multi-racial children and this led to her beginning to write.
