Online Abuse – Hate Incidents

- Internet trolling: quarter of teenagers suffered online abuse last year
- This article is more than 3 years old
- Survey of 13- to 18-year-olds reveals teenagers with disabilities and those from minority ethnic backgrounds are more likely to encounter cyberbullying
- One in four teenagers suffered hate incidents online last year, a figure described by experts as a “wake-up call” on the impact of internet trolling.
- The survey of 13- to 18-year-olds found that 24% had been targeted due to their gender, sexual orientation, race, religion, disability or transgender identity. One in 25 said they were singled out for abuse all or most of the time.

The Statistics

- A recent survey also found four in five adolescents had seen or heard online hate during the previous 12 months. Researchers defined such abuse as offensive, mean or threatening, and either targeted directly at a person or group or generally shared online.
- Teenagers with disabilities and those from African, Caribbean, Asian, Middle Eastern and other minority ethnic groups were more likely to encounter cyberbullying, the report concluded.
- Of those questioned, 41% said online hate had increased in the past year. Social media was found to be the most common platform in which young people witnessed such abuse, which in some instances can be classified as a hate crime.
- However, the majority of respondents said victims had received support online, with 93% saying they had seen their friends post supportive content last year.

Don't be Meme

- In just a few short words and a funny picture, memes are often able to capture a “big” emotion they struggle with, making it smaller and easier to handle. And while it’s definitely true some can use memes as a way to avoid addressing unresolved trauma or pain, a lot of times they address topics we don’t talk about openly, and can go a long way in reassuring people they are not the only ones struggling.

Sexting and staying safe online

- When children share nude images of themselves with others, they are distributing child pornography.
- If these images are received from others and stored on personal devices, individuals are in possession of child pornography.
- Despite threats of prosecution, formal punishment, and fear-based messages from the media, rates of sexting among children have remained relatively constant.
- Adolescents have always experimented with their sexuality, and will continue to do so via sexting and similar intimate behaviours.

5 facts about sexting

1. Images sent on sites like Snapchat can still be saved and screenshotted.
2. It's not okay for someone to pressure you into sending a nude.
3. Sending or receiving a nude when you're under 18 is against the law.
4. Not everyone in a relationship will share nudes.
5. If something goes wrong, there's support to help.

Sexting and staying safe online

- We hope that none of you are ever in this position but . . . If you are being pressured or threatened to send nude photos, keep evidence when possible.
- Having digital evidence (such as screenshots of text messages) of any maliciousness or threats of sextortion will help the police in their investigation and prosecution (if necessary) and social media sites in their flagging and deletion of accounts

Reporting Behaviour Online

BLOCK AND REPORT BULLYING OR SEXTING

Lots of social media sites can help you if you're being bullied or if people are bullying you online.

Here's how to report sexting or bullying on:

Snapchat

Facebook and Facebook Messenger

Instagram

Twitter

Who are you????

- If someone sends you a sext, do not send it to—or show—anyone else. This could be considered non-consensual sharing of pornography, and there are laws prohibiting it and which outline serious penalties
- If you send someone a sext, make sure you know and fully trust them. “Catfishing”—where someone sets up a fictitious profile or pretends to be someone else to lure you into a fraudulent relationship (and, often, to send sexts)—happens more often than you think.
- If you haven’t met them and feel a true friendship, do not simply trust them. Bare in mind people have been let down by friends sharing secrets – you are committing your secret to your online footprint – Forever.

Is that me?????

- Try not to include your face in ANY messages. Of course, this is so that images are not immediately identifiable as yours but also because certain social media sites have sophisticated facial recognition algorithms that automatically tag you in any pictures you may to stay private. So basically, it wouldn't matter what your own security settings are you'll be tagged on other peoples sites.
- Make sure the images do not include tattoos, birthmarks, scars, or other features that could connect them to you. In addition, remove all jewellery before sharing.
- Also consider your surroundings. Bedroom pictures could, for example, include wall art or furniture that others recognize.

Where are you????

- Turn your device's location services off for all of your social media apps, make sure your photos are not automatically tagged with your location or username, and delete any meta-data digitally attached to your images.
- Don't post any pictures of yourself online without removing data links via settings.

But it's encrypted!!!!

- No, you're still not safe

Apps can promote that provide the capability for sent images to be automatically and securely deleted

However, you can never guarantee that a screenshot was not taken, nor that another device was not used to capture the image without you being notified.

You have no control of the human looking at the device, all can screenshot!
