How British Values is Taught in Our School – EYFS

EYFS and Fundamental British Values
Democracy	Rule of Law	Individual Liberty	Mutual Respect and Tolerance
In the EYFS, children are encouraged to make choices and decisions, such as which activity they want to participate in or which toy they want to play with. Teachers and practitioners can encourage children to express their opinions and preferences, and to listen to and respect the opinions and preferences of others. This can help children understand the importance of democratic decision-making and the value of respecting the opinions of others.	In the EYFS, children are taught to understand the importance of rules and routines in their daily lives, such as following instructions and taking turns. Teachers and practitioners can encourage children to understand the importance of following rules and routines, and to take responsibility for their own actions.	In the EYFS, children are encouraged to explore and discover the world around them through play and exploration. Teachers and practitioners can provide a safe and supportive environment where children can express themselves freely, and where their interests and preferences are respected.	In the EYFS, children are taught to respect and value others, regardless of differences in background, culture, or beliefs. Teachers and practitioners can encourage children to understand and appreciate the diversity of their peers, and to show kindness and empathy towards others. In the EYFS, children are introduced to different cultures and traditions through stories, songs, and celebrations. Teachers and practitioners can use these opportunities to help children understand and appreciate the diversity of different cultures and traditions, and to promote respect for other cultures and beliefs. Children can also be encouraged to share their own experiences and beliefs with others, and to listen to and learn from the experiences and beliefs of others.
