The Rule of Law

There are many new rules and laws that have been introduced to keep us safe during the Covid-19 pandemic. It's important to understand why these rules have been made and how they help us.

Should you always report those who aren't following the rules?

It has been announced by Prime Minister, Boris Johnson, that Covid marshals will be introduced in towns and city centres, in parts of the UK, to help ensure social distancing rules are followed. He believes that the public want to see 'stronger enforcement' of the rules. The government said marshals can either be volunteers or existing members of council staff from local governments. In areas where marshals have already been introduced, they have done things like given out hand sanitiser and face coverings, answered questions and explained social distancing guidelines to members of the public. Marshals do not have the power to enforce social distancing or to issue fines to anyone who breaks the rules.

Boris Johnson has said that he believes that the public want to see 'stronger enforcement' of the rules. Do you agree? Would you like to see more proactive enforcement of the rules or do you think people should be trusted to adhere to the rules without force or repercussions. Thinking of the rules and laws regarding lockdown, do you agree with all of them? Do you understand the reasons behind them? Considering people who do not follow the rules and laws, many of the sanctions are monetary fines, which increase if additional rule breaches occur. Do you think this is the best way to ensure people adhere to the rules? • Some people have claimed to be unaware of some of the changes. If you encountered someone breaching the rules, who didn't know what they were, what would you do?
