We can choose whether to use reusable or disposable items such as face masks. It is important to consider a number of factors, including the environment, when we make our choices.

Should disposable face masks be banned?

It is estimated that people in Britain are sending over 1.6 billion non-biodegradable face masks to landfill every single month, according to research conducted by shopping comparison site, finder.com. To reduce this, a new scheme has been introduced in Brighton and Hove to recycle face masks and other personal protective equipment (PPE). Special bins have been installed to reduce the amount of PPE litter, which is used to make more bins and other plastic items. The scheme is the first of its kind in the country. And in Wales, one company is working to turn hospital waste into new masks with 65% recycled materials. Many environmentalists believe that reusable cloth face masks are a much more sustainable solution to the problem.

Shopping chains, Wilko and Morrisons, are both now offering mask recycling options as are some local authorities, including Brighton and Hove. Do you think more should offer this service or do you think it would be more beneficial for the use of cloth masks to be encouraged? Now laws have changed regarding face coverings – do you still choose to wear one? Have you noticed a reduction in people wearing them in recent weeks? Over recent years, there has been an increasing emphasis on sustainability and reducing plastics, particularly single use. How do you think the coronavirus pandemic affected this priority?
