In sport, we can decide whether we want to take part in teams and competitions or not. If we do, it is important to consider the effect our decisions will have on the other participants.

Question: What role does sport play in our lives?

Six English football clubs announced plans in April to form a breakaway league, which they hoped to create as a new midweek competition called the European Super League. Within days of making the announcement, all six teams had formally dropped out of the competition. Manchester City were the first club to quit after Chelsea had said it would look to prepare plans to withdraw. The other four sides - Arsenal, Liverpool, Manchester United and Tottenham pulled out shortly after. Fans, football authorities and government ministers in the UK, and across Europe, expressed anger at what they said would be an unfair competition that would keep many teams out of top European football. The Super League said it would reconsider "the most appropriate steps" to reshape the project.

One of the journalists for Newcastle United's website, The Mag, writes, "While the word 'sport' has many definitions, at elite level it is business, big business." Do you agree that when sport gets to a certain level it becomes more focused on making money? • Why do you think that the majority of football fans and supporters appeared to not be in support of a new Super League? • Do you prefer taking part in, or watching sports? Do you think overall, team sports are more beneficial for young people than individual exercise? • Is sport or being part Of a team or family an important part of your life?
