British Values

7th – 13th June 2021

Individual Liberty

There are lots of different jobs that we can choose to do when we leave school. The types of jobs people do might change over time. Sometimes employees, like older farmers, are offered money to persuade them to find a different job. Older farmers can choose to stay in the job or take the money and leave farming.

How important is the role of farmers?

The government is trying to encourage greener farming methods and believes that the next generation of farmers will be best equipped to make these changes. Environment Secretary, George Eustice would like to encourage older farmers to make room for younger farmers, where possible. Farming is a difficult and demanding job and about 40% of UK farmers are currently over the age of 65 with an average age of 59. The government believes younger farmers will be more open to new nature-friendly farming ideas and would be more likely to set up other businesses, such as campsites, to diversify how farmland is utilised. It also wants to encourage sustainable approaches to farming, which can help get the best out of the farm at the same time as caring for the environment.

Do you agree with the government's assumption that younger farmers are less resistant to change than older farmers? Can you think of any other sectors of work where this may be the case? Share your thoughts on the moral discourse of paying someone to leave their job. Can you think of alternative ways to encourage the changes in farming that the government wish to see?
