If the rover Perseverance discovers that life existed on Mars long ago and that living on other planets may be possible, we can talk about whether we think this would be a good thing to do in the distant future.

NASA rover robot Perseverance has successfully landed on Mars to search for signs of ancient life forms. Could you imagine living on another planet?

Last month, Nasa's £1.9 billion rover mission successfully landed on Mars after its seven-month, 290-million-mile journey from Earth. The rover, named Perseverance is packed with ground breaking technology. The mission marks an ambitious first step in the effort to collect samples from Mars and return them to Earth. It is thought that life forms from Earth could temporarily survive a Mars-like atmosphere. Some of the findings from Perseverance's journey aim to help scientists to further understand the possibility of learning about environments beyond our own planet.

What do we already know about the landing of the Perseverance rover on Mars? Is finding out about other planets something that is of interest to you? What do you think are some of the benefits of learning about other planets? Do you think the time taken and the cost of the programmes and research is justified? In the future, do you think that people will colonise other planets? If so, why do think this will happen and how far in the future do you think this will take place?
