

Writing a Diary

Lots of people write diaries as a record of the things they've done. You may have written one before – either everyday or about a specific event.

The most famous diary writers are Anne Frank (who wrote about her life during WW2) and Samuel Pepys (who wrote about life in London between 1659 and 1669).

And of course you may have read the fictional diary of Greg Heffley (Diary of a Wimpy kid).

Your second task is to keep a diary over the next few weeks, recording some of the things you've done. You can do this daily or weekly. We look forward to hearing about the sorts of things you've written about when you join us in September.
