Last chance to inform yourself!

- Party Political Broadcast (also known, in pre-election campaigning periods, as a party election broadcast) is a television or radio broadcast made by a political party. In the United Kingdom the Communications Act 2003 prohibits political advertising on television or radio; parties are instead allocated broadcast slots (usually around five minutes long) free of charge on broadcast channels using criteria set by Parliament
- Watch the film on slide 3 first to give you a perspective on politicians statements and contributions to debates.
- Watch the Party Election Broadcasts to help inform your decision before you vote NEXT WEEK.
- You will discuss the content of these films and make notes on the main points to remind you next week.

Parklands Polling Station Rules

- Political discussion is BANNED in the polling station – officials will intervene if they hear discussions which aim to influence other voters.
- You can not make any noise that could disrupt other voters. This includes loud discussions, shouting or playing music.
- Voting is a private matter so you MUST be alone when you mark a cross on the ballot paper.
- You MUST NOT put your name on, or sign your voting card or your vote will not count. They are considered rejected ballots because the voter has revealed their identity and breached the rules of a secret ballot.
- You MUST NOT have your mobile phone out and shouldn't be tempted to take any photos in the polling station. This can result in a prison sentence.
