Get an insight into what a day working for the NHS would entail!

Focusing on NHS Careers for Men but open to all students. An NHS study last year found only 1 in 10 nurses were men, and revealed a stigma surrounding the job, where men can be deterred due to a perceived link between nursing and femininity.

Come along to our insight event with the NHS to hear about the various routes into nursing for men and what the life of an NHS employee entails.

We want to challenge the stigma around men in nursing, so with your support, we can ensure more young people apply for roles within the NHS and nursing industry. Hear from current Nurses sharing their stories and offering their advice to students who have an interest in this profession.

Join us on Monday 10th May, 5-6pm to hear more about the 350 different types of roles the NHS has to offer.

We are very much hoping that this will be a 'real-life' event allowing students to visit the building and meet the staff face-to-face. However, this will, of course, depend on any Covid restrictions at the time.

Those pupils with places should have recently received a 'save the date' postcard and we will be sending out more information on how to book in due course.

LMI in Lancashire

Lancashire poised for new jobs and economic growth

Economic development and infrastructure schemes are planned for Lancashire, bringing thousands of new jobs, investment, skills and economic growth.

At the Samlesbury Enterprise Zone, located next to BAE Systems, a site that will deliver more than 2,000 jobs and up to 1.5m square feet of development space, the county council has been working closely with its partners to facilitate and enable development. BAE Systems have invested significantly in the site with new manufacturing and high-tech facilities, including the Academy for Skills and Knowledge.

There has been excellent progress on the construction of the Advanced Manufacturing Research Centre North West. The £20m AMRC North West, led by the University of Sheffield and supported by the Lancashire Enterprise Partnership, will provide world class business support to position Lancashire as a leader in innovation-driven, sustainable economic growth and will act as a catalyst for further inward investment.

The Eden Project North is a proposed major new attraction in Morecambe, that seeks to reimagine the British seaside resort for the 21st century. Eden Project North, along with partners including the county council, are currently preparing a planning application, which is due to be submitted later this year.

The business case shows that this project is projected to attract around one million visitors a year and directly employ more than 400 people. In addition to money spent at Eden itself, visitors could spend an estimated £200m per year in the region, supporting an additional 1,500 jobs.

Preparatory work is continuing to develop a mixed-use site known as Lancashire Central next to the M65 motorway, near Bamber Bridge, working with developer partner Maple Grove Developments – part of the Preston-based Eric Wright Group. This is one of the largest mixed-use employment sites in the North West and could deliver thousands of jobs and provide much needed industrial and logistics accommodation for new and existing businesses.

Mid-tier businesses across the North West hope to embark on a "major investment and hiring drive" this year, with almost 90% planning to recruit more staff, a new report has revealed

The latest 'Rethinking the Economy' survey from accountancy and business advisory firm BDO showed that medium-sized firms are set to "spearhead" the UK's economic recovery, with 80% saying that 2021 "is the year to invest".

The survey showed that 40% of North West businesses plan to either expand by investing in new locations or acquiring other businesses.

Business confidence has also increased, the survey said, as 93% of firms in the region expect revenues to return to pre-pandemic levels within a year of the strictest restrictions being lifted.

UK-based FutureLearners are delving into short courses to explore the topics of content design, mental health in young people and the latest research in ADHD.

Those looking to progress in a specialist area and achieve digital certificates have been subscribing to ExpertTracks on data analysis using Excel, how to play jazz piano and psychology.

Meanwhile in the world of microcredentials, The Open University's Online Teaching: Creating Courses for Adult Learners is the most popular option for FutureLearners looking to boost their professional credentials.

Year 11s - make sure you have accepted all the college places you have been offered, so you have a back-up option, just in case. As we saw last year, anything can happen, so be prepared. Enrolment day is too late!

Colleges can withdraw courses depending on staffing issues, loss of funding or lack of student interest, so it pays to have a Plan B in place.

The school holidays are the perfect time to boost your CV for future job applications and interviews. The earlier you start to build up your CV, the more you'll stand out from the crowd. Plus, it doesn't have to be boring - boosting your CV during the school holidays could lead to new friends and even a bit of extra pocket money! Andrew Fennell from Standout CV explains how.

Get a part-time job

Getting any kind of summer job, even if it's not directly related to the career you're interested in, will immediately boost your CV.

When you leave school, college or university and start applying for jobs, employers will want to see that you have a solid work ethic and have built up a range of transferable skills.

Whether it's working at a local shop or café or helping out at the family business, you're sure to develop solid skills in teamwork, communication, customer service and time management. These can all be put to use in a wide range of industries.

See How to find a summer job for ideas on where to look for work.

Spend time volunteering

Not only does volunteering show that you're a hardworking and generous person, but you could also build up experience which is highly relevant to your future career goals.

Would you enjoy a career which involves working with animals? Contact your local animal shelter and ask if you can volunteer over the summer. Would you like to pursue a career which involves helping others? Try approaching a care home in your area to offer a helping hand.

Volunteering opportunities are endless – you're sure to find something which suits your interests. And if you're not quite sure what you want to do in the future yet, it'll still show a fantastic work ethic!

See Get volunteering for more ideas.

Learn a new skill

Is there something you've always wanted to learn but haven't had the chance to pick up? The school holidays are the perfect time to do it! The more skills you have and can talk about, the more interesting your CV will become.

How about learning to play a musical instrument, working on your photography skills or attending a creative writing class? Picking up new skills is an invaluable way to show your initiative and boost your employability

See Easy ways to learn new skills to find out more.

Join a club

When you start to apply for your first full-time job, you might not have much work experience – but hobbies and interests can be a great addition to your CV.

If you're already a member of a sports team or other club, sign up to all the extra holiday sessions that you can and really give it your all. And if you're not part of any yet, why not make it your holiday goal to join one?

Being an active member of a club or team shows that you're a committed, reliable team player. Employers will see this as a huge plus point.

So, start planning your school holidays now by looking for part-time jobs, volunteering opportunities, classes or interesting clubs. Your future self will thank you!

Protecting otters

Civil engineers Bob and Marc came up with an ingenious way to keep otters safe!

Hi, I'm Marc. And I'm Bob. And we're on a mission to save animals.

So we've been working constructing a biomass power station just up the road here, and we were approached by the Environmental Action Group in Killin to come up with a solution to help with the otters that were killed and injured down here on the main road. We thought, yeah, this is definitely something that we can get involved in and help the situation.

We heard about a similar situation on another project and after discussions with the other engineers we decided to opt for the solution. The solution was to install roadside traffic bollards and implement a reflective strip on the side which directs the car lights into the verges, and what that does is the light then scares or spooks the animals that are trying to cross the road, and in turn scaring the animals away so that they don't get run over.

It's quite rewarding and when you see the photographs initially of, you know, otter deaths at the side of the road and to think that there's a good chance that we've now prevented that up here, you know, it's a good feeling. Being part of this project was a great feeling, that we've managed to accomplish it, to know that we've done something that's ultimately protecting animals, it's made it worthwhile. Engineering's a good industry to get into. Continual different challenges, you don't get bored, you've got loads of things to think about and work out and tackle on a daily basis, which is great, you know.

It's a good feeling at the end of a project when it's come together and you can see it for yourself.

I would recommend engineering to anyone. If you want a career which is fast paced, completely different every day, poses you with challenges... the feeling after you've overcome them and got to where you need to be at the end, is fantastic.

Emily Shorrock, Apprentice at Perfect Recruitment

I started out within the Catering and Hospitality industry, through my course at Runshaw College. At Runshaw, I achieved my triple distinction star through completing my Catering, Hospitality & Events Management course. Through my willingness to learn I was approached by one of my tutors, to say that an opportunity for an apprentice had come up within the industry at Perfect Recruitment. I took this - the PERFECT opportunity.

When I started at Perfect Recruitment, my course was arranged for me with Runshaw College. I was given the opportunity to choose from various different courses, however, I chose to accept the Business Admin course.

Throughout my apprenticeship I was guided by my tutors. I learnt from doing my job at Perfect Recruitment in my day-to-day roles, things I could use in my evidence and written work. During my apprenticeship, I have had multiple topics which I have had to complete, a lot relevant to every work place, such as equality and diversity, filing business documents, using telecommunication systems.

My work day at Perfect Recruitment consists of answering phone calls, taking temporary bookings for staff such as Chefs, FOH and other hospitality professionals. As well as this filling bookings and getting our active candidates on our database out in as much work as possible. With regards to temps, I do also interview and sign up our new candidates, as well as reference check, send out contracts and ask for all documents in order for them to be able to work with us. I follow the company compliance documents to make sure everything is done as it should be done. Along with this, I remain in contact with our relief team, solving any problems they throw my way, along with regular updates and feedback from our clients, and catering for their needs when required. Our clients tend to be hotels, bars, football grounds and pubs. More recently we have recruited for production, schools and nursing homes. I also have to deal with enhanced DBS for the schools and ensure we are compliant in this sector.

There have been highs and lows along the way. The highest moment in my time at Perfect Recruitment was filling my first booking when I had absolutely no experience. I felt very proud of myself as I threw myself into this and achieved my goal. The lowest moment though has to be the COVID 19 pandemic. Seeing all of the bookings and chefs we had out working just cancel one after the other. All clients cancelled shifts as they weren't allowed to open. We reacted to this and focused on the care sector and tried to secure work for our chefs in local nursing homes.

My course, has helped developed not only my knowledge, but myself as a person too.

I am proud of what I have achieved, even with the pandemic prolonging my finish date.

My qualification will help me with my job role as a Recruitment Consultant at Perfect Recruitment – specialising in Temporary staffing solutions.
