Unbinding

In his Spiritual Exercises St Ignatius Loyola suggests that when reading a particular Gospel passage we should put ourselves in the place of each character in turn and use our imagination to see how we would feel in those circumstances. While attempting to put ourselves imaginatively in Lazarus' place we might become aware of how tomb-like our present way of life is, and we might rekindle a longing for freedom which has perhaps been buried for years.' [1]

'We each garb ourselves in routines and practices that carry us through our relationships, our work, our hungers, our lives. Those routines and practices influence how we receive and respond to God's call. We may be swathed in layers of habits that may have once fitted us, habits we may once have found beautiful, habits we may yet be attached to long past their usefulness but which now insulate and shroud us from the presence of God.

Jesus enacts Lazarus' raising in the context of a community. Jesus calls Lazarus forth, but he calls upon those around Lazarus—sisters, kinfolk, neighbours—to unbind him and let him go. The season of Lent beckons us to examine our most entrenched habits as individuals and communities: to sort through them and to recognise that Christ has power over them. This season reminds us that the miraculous and the mundane are intimately intertwined. We are called to wrestle with the very details that shape our lives together so that new life may emerge. In our daily living, what patterns are life-giving and help us notice the presence of God? Which habits keep us bound? What helps us hear the voice of Christ who stands at the threshold between death and life? What will help us choose to come forth, and to help someone else do the same? Are there people who can help with our unbinding? Are there people we can help with their unbinding?' [2]

'Unbinding and letting go of the past is not a rejection but an offering. We do not reject the past, throw it away, or deny its value and importance to us. Instead, we free it to be made new, to be given new life.' [3]
