Time in the wilderness

Time in the wilderness, it seems, is the norm for God's people. After the Israelites left Egypt they went to the wilderness. It was their preparation for the promised land. After Jesus was baptised he went to the wilderness. It was his preparation for his public ministry. And it was in the wilderness that "the word of God came to John son of Zechariah." (Luke 3:2) It was his task to prepare "the whole Judean countryside and all the people of Jerusalem" to become aware of the one who "stands among you whom you do not know." (John 1:26) The word of God and the wilderness always go together. That was true for John the Baptist and it is true for us. We could name any wilderness in our lives and find a corresponding word of God.

- In the wilderness of exile the word of God speaks of coming home.
- In the wilderness of broken relationships the word of God speaks of reconciliation.
- In the wilderness of self-doubt the word of God speaks of your being beloved.
- In the wilderness of scarcity the word of God speaks of generosity and abundance.
- In the wilderness of sin and guilt the word of God speaks of mercy and forgiveness.
- In the wilderness of loss and sorrow the word of God speaks of healing and joy.
- In the wilderness of emptiness and barrenness the word of God speaks of fullness and fruitfulness.
- In the wilderness of death the word of God speaks of resurrection.

The word of God is the divine presence that sustains us in and carries us through our wilderness. It is a creative word, a word that calls us to examine our lives, to turn around, to change our way of being; to see the world, one another and ourselves in a new way. This is the repentance to which John the Baptist calls us. Ultimately, it is the call to love and be loved.
