What happens following an assessment to address pupil misconceptions and reteaching of essential knowledge?

- There is a question level analysis completed for receptive skills (Listening/reading). Production skills are marked by the class teacher, highlighting areas of excellence, areas for development and how students can move on to the next level of learning.
- A whole lesson is then spent re-examining receptive questions where students underperformed or found difficult, and strategies are discussed on how to approach similar receptive skill questions. For writing and speaking assessments students are given model answers to dissect and highlight key features. Similarly, to receptive skills misconceptions (for example tense formation) are discussed and re-taught either by the teacher or another student before students are given questions to answer to practice this skill.
- From the teacher's perspective future lessons are adapted to incorporate retrieval of these key skills later.

Formative Assessment in Spanish

- Questioning, quizzes, mini whiteboards, homework tasks, retrieval practice.

Feedback and Acting on Feedback (should be on the most valuable thing)

- Students are given back their written/ spoken work and asked to re-draft and improve their work in green pen taking on board what has been discussed in the class and the individual feedback given by the teacher.
- Students are given a similar receptive skills type question following teacher guidance.
