MAKING BLACK LIVES MATTER MORE IN PRIMARY HISTORY

This practical session will demonstrate how to reach beyond the traditional black history month slot ensuring that more black history is woven into the primary history curriculum as a whole. This webinar will show how more diverse content choices at key stages one and two can lead to greater inclusion, where Black and Asian pupils can see their identities mirrored more in the taught curriculum while at the same time providing all pupils with a window onto a wider historical world.

The series consists of three webinars, the first dealing with Black British history, the second with African history (taught in its own right and before the continent was impacted by European colonialism), and the third deals with British South Asian history. To book all three, please see overleaf.
