

Sam in your form is having a party. He has invited three of your close friends but not you. They decide to go.

Are you:

1. Angry at your friends for going. (back 1)
2. A bit annoyed but keep it to yourself and don't discuss the party at all. (stay)
3. Open about the fact you're annoyed but say you hope your friends have a nice time anyway. (forward 1)

Your friend falls over in the street, on their backside in front of loads of people.

Do you:

1. Laugh loudly at point. (back 2)
2. Get embarrassed and pretend you're not with them. (back 1)
3. See if they are upset or laughing and either help or laugh with them depending on this. (forward 2)

Your best friend's parents are quite strict. They aren't allowed to go and see the horror movie the rest of your friendship group are going to see.

Do you:

1. Go anyway and talk about how brilliant it was in front of them. (back 2)
2. Tell your other friends you'd rather stay home to watch it online as you can get pizza too. Then invite your best friend over and don't tell his parents you're watching the horror movie. (forward 1)
3. Say you're not fussed about seeing it and miss out on something you really want to do. (stay)

You have two best friends. One of them comes out to you as gay. They say they are not ready for anyone else to know yet.

Do you:

1. Tell your other best friend too but make them promise not to tell anyone. (back 1)
2. Tell no one. (forward 2)
3. Keep bugging them to tell people because its making you feel bad keeping a secret from your other friend (back 2).

You are having a party. You know your best friend is mates with a really lonely and unpopular student who wants to come to your party. Your best friend is a good person and wants this unpopular student to have a chance at making friends.

Do you say:

1. 'No way, people will think my party is lame if they turn up!' (back 2)
2. 'Ok, but I'm making it clear to everyone that you invited them, not me!' (back 1)
3. 'If you like them, they can't be that bad. I'll give them a chance.' (forward 2)

Your two best friends fall out over something you think is pretty stupid. People in your class are starting to take sides and tensions are rising.

Do you:

1. Pick whichever side has the most 'popular' people in, you feel safer this way. (back 1)
2. Pick whichever side you feel is more in the right but be respectful to everyone (stay)
3. Pick no side, be respectful to all and make it clear you think it is a stupid thing to argue over. (forwards 1)
