

"What's that up ahead?"

Hal jumps up as he spies

Some bright twinkling shapes far ahead in the sky.

They sparkle and dazzle; they glow with white light.

Could this be the Sun that we lost in the night?

"Oh no!" giggles Hal with a wink of his eye,

"I know those small diamonds up in the sky.

Those beautiful, twinkling space dots are stars!

I'm perfectly certain that that's what they are!"

"We must find the Sun!" Hal commands with a jump,

"Before we go straight back to Earth with a bump!

I must keep on trying, although it is hard.

I know if I try I can reach for the stars."

"What's that up ahead?"

Hal stands up on tiptoes

To see a vast shape: it is red and it glows.

There are mountains and valleys and deserts so dry;

Could this be the Sun that has gone from the sky?
